“ Mom (Ann) would occasionally speak to Clair on the phone. She got to be hard of hearing, so she would practically be yelling into the phone. I'm not sure if Clair was heard of hearing or was just yelling back so Mom could hear. I don't know what either one said to each other because of the yelling. They were both funny. You couldn't keep them on the phone long enough to say they talked, because after a few minutes they were done and we're ready to hangup.

“ My mom, Sheila Breeding Fletcher, recalled many stories about the brother she loved so much. She shared of his generosity and how he brought her the only doll she ever had for Christmas when he was on furlough from the war as well as a beautiful dress. It was one of the few Christmas' she received gifts as times were hard. I remember his strong faith and how he always loved everyone and addressed them as sister or brother. He will truly be missed but I am happy he is in a better place without pain and with Aunt Mae.
